Without admitting or denying the allegations, the firm and Gautney consented to the described sanctions and to the entry of findings that the firm, acting through registered representatives, recommended and effected the purchase of limited partnership interests in hedge funds without having reasonable grounds for believing that the recommendations and resultant transactions were suitable for the customers. The findings stated that the firm, acting through Gautney, failed to reasonably supervise the sale of hedge fund investments by the representatives and failed to perform due diligence on the hedge funds or have any method for principal review of customer hedge fund purchases. The findings also stated that the firm had no documentation confirming that each registered representative had attended an annual compliance meeting or participated in a phone call to satisfy the requirements of an annual meeting. The findings also included that the firm failed to accurately report municipal securities transactions to the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board (MSRB).

FINRA found that the firm failed to report through the Automated Transaction Commission Reporting Service any last sale reports or non-tape, non-clearing reports for its “riskless” principal transactions in NASDAQ securities because it failed to activate its Market Participation Identifying symbol (MPID) and verify that its trades had been reported. The findings stated that the firm, acting through Tucker, failed to provide written notification to customers of the amount of any remuneration the firm received, or was to receive, in connection with transactions involving shares of investment companies, and failed to ensure that for each account to which credit had been extended, that the account received a written statement disclosing interest period and annual interest rate(s) information.

The findings also stated that the firm made reports available on its routing of non-directed orders in covered securities that included incorrect information as to the identity of the routed venue and that there was a payment for order flow when no such payments were made. The findings stated that the firm incorrectly reported the second leg of a "riskless" principal transaction in a designated security to the OTC Reporting Facility because it incorrectly designated the capacity of the transaction as "principal"; failed to submit to the OTC Reporting Facility for the offsetting, "riskless" portion of a "riskless" principal transaction in a designated security, either a clearing-only report with a capacity indicator of "riskless principal" or a non-tape, non-clearing report with a capacity indicator of "riskless principal"; and incorrectly reported a trade as "riskless" principal that was not a "riskless" principal trade. The findings stated that the firm accepted reports of transactions in eligible securities in the NMC that did not reflect the correct symbol indicating whether it acted in a principal or agency capacity. The findings also stated that the firm incorrectly reported a clearing-only or non-tape, non-clearing report to the NMC because it incorrectly designated transactions in OTC equity securities as offsetting, “riskless” portions of “riskless” principal transactions when the transactions should have been media reported as principal transactions instead. The findings also included that the firm incorrectly reported the second leg of “riskless” principal transactions in designated securities to the OTC Reporting Facility because it incorrectly designated the capacity of the transactions as “principal.” FINRA found that the firm failed to report the correct execution time to the OTC Reporting Facility in last sale reports of transactions in OTC equity securities. Without admitting or denying the findings, Robinson consented to the described sanctions and to the entry of findings that he entered priced limit orders in NASDAQ securities for a proprietary account at his member firm into the NASDAQ Market Center at prices intended to impact the pre-opening Best Bid or Offer (BBO) by creating a new inside bid (offer) that was a departure from the previous day's closing price in the securities, knowing that the full price and size of such orders would be reflected in the public quotation system as the best prices and sizes at which a market participant was willing to buy or sell the securities. The findings stated that Robinson induced other market participants to reflect bids (offers) similar to the price of the displayed limit orders, and then intentionally entered non-displayable odd lot limit orders to buy or sell shares of securities into NASDAQ on the opposite side of the market, creating a crossed market with the displayed orders. The findings also stated that Robinson knew that the non-displayed orders would be executed against other market participants' quotations during the pre-opening spin, bought and sold the securities on an automated basis during the pre-opening spin, cancelled most of the displayed limit orders entered into NASDAQ, and sometimes updated the original displayed order with another, cancelling the original order prior to the pre-opening spin. The findings also included that Robinson bought (sold) securities at prices that were lower (higher) than he would have been able but for the entry of his non-bona fide orders that resulted in him receiving a financial benefit of $16,281.86. In addition, FINRA found that Robinson received executions at an improved price in NASDAQ securities, by entering share orders into Electronic Communication Networks (ECN) on one side of the market that improved the inside market, causing another market participant to match the price of the order and improve the execution price of orders he placed on the other side of the market. FINRA also found that Robinson entered orders into one or more ECNs on one side of the market that improved the existing inside market, narrowed the inside spread, inducing other market participants to enter an order at the same price on the same side of the order, repeatedly placed orders that improved the inside market of the stock and canceling the preceding inferior order before entering an order on the other side of the market. In addition, FINRA determined that Robinson intentionally entered contra side orders at the same price of the market improving order to the corresponding ECN, causing a non-bona fide transaction to be published by trading with his own order. In addition, the findings included that Robinson bought (sold) securities at prices that were lower (higher) than he would have been able but for the entry of his market improving orders into an ECN that resulted in him receiving a financial benefit of $16,988 with this trading.

Without admitting or denying the findings, Valerio consented to the described sanction and to the entry of findings that he was the broker of record on a public customer's account while at a member firm and, after changing employment and becoming registered through another member firm, Valerio forged the public customer's signature on account transfer forms and submitted them to the firm because the customer did not intend to transfer her brokerage account to the new firm. (FINRA Case #2008012143901)

Flavio Guido Varone (CRD #1204320, Registered Representative, Chesterland, Ohio) was barred from association with any FINRA member in any capacity and ordered to pay $17,866.51, plus interest, in restitution. The sanctions were based on findings that Varone received $17,866.51 from a public customer to open a trust account for the customer's relative and failed to open the account as instructed. The findings stated that Varone received $236,937 from another customer to purchase a fixed annuity, but failed to do so. The findings also stated that Varone deposited funds from his bank account into the customer's to give the impression that the customer was receiving at least some of the payments anticipated from the purported purchase of the fixed annuity. The findings also included that Varone's conduct violated his member firm's policies prohibiting representatives from holding customer funds and commingling or depositing them in a representative's account. In addition, FINRA found that Varone failed to respond to FINRA requests for information. (FINRA Case #2006007101701)

Jack Barnes Vasconcellos (CRD #2749202, Registered Representative, Canyon Lake, California) submitted a Letter of Acceptance, Waiver and Consent in which he was barred from association with any FINRA member in any capacity. Without admitting or denying the findings, Vasconcellos consented to the described sanction and to the entry of findings that he received funds totaling $127,907.75 from individuals to purchase fixed annuity investments and, without the individuals' knowledge or consent, deposited the funds into his business bank account for his own personal use. The findings stated that Vasconcellos kept the funds for over four years and then repaid the individuals $137,433, which included the return of their investment principal plus earned interest. The findings also stated that Vasconcellos prepared fictitious documents related to the individuals' purported investments in fixed annuity policies to conceal his improper use of the funds. The findings also included that Vasconcellos failed to respond to FINRA requests for information or documents and to appear for an on-the-record interview. (FINRA Case #2007011325401)

Brantley Sewell Wise (CRD #2279645, Registered Representative, Moncks Corner, South Carolina) submitted a Letter of Acceptance, Waiver and Consent in which he was fined $5,000 and suspended from association with any FINRA member in any capacity for three months. The fine must be paid either immediately upon Wise's reassociation with a FINRA member firm following his suspension, or prior to the filing of any application or request for relief from any statutory disqualification, whichever is earlier. Without admitting or denying the findings, Wise consented to the described sanctions and to the entry of findings that he engaged in outside business activities and failed to give prompt written notice to either his member firm or an affiliated insurance company. The findings stated that Wise also completed a firm outside business activity disclosure statement in which he represented that he was not involved in selling annuities of other companies, and signed an annual certification statement acknowledging that he understood he must first receive permission from his member firm prior to engaging in any outside business activity.

The suspension is in effect from November 3, 2008, through February 2, 2009. (FINRA Case #2007011365201)

The complaint alleges that Wils submitted a written request to his member firm's insurance affiliate with a customer's forged signature to change her address to a post office box in Wils' name, received a $5,000 check payable to the customer, endorsed the check with his and the customer's names and deposited the check into his account, without the customer's knowledge and consent. The complaint also alleges that Wils failed to respond to FINRA requests for information and documents, and failed to appear for an on-the-record interview. (FINRA Case #2006005281301)

FINRA Fines SunTrust Investment Services $700,000 for Fee-Based Account and Excessive Commission Violations

Firm Also Required to Certify Voluntary Refunds of $713,362 to Customers

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) has fined SunTrust Investment Services, Inc., $700,000 for supervisory violations relating to its fee-based brokerage business and to commissions on certain low-priced stocks. In assessing the fine announced today, FINRA took into account SunTrust's voluntary refunding of more than $713,000 in fees and interest to affected accountholders.

Fee-based brokerage accounts first became available in 1999 as a result of a proposed Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) rule that exempted brokers from certain elements of the Investment Advisors Act of 1940. In March 2007, a federal court struck down the final version of that SEC rule - and since then, fee-based accounts have become obsolete. SunTrust terminated its fee-based accounts—called Portfolio Choice accounts—on Dec. 31, 2006.

Typically in fee-based brokerage accounts, customers were charged an annual fee that was usually a percentage of the assets in the account with an annual minimum, rather than a commission for each transaction as in a traditional brokerage account. Firms were required to determine whether a fee-based account was appropriate for an investor based on the projected cost to the investor, whether alternative fee structures were available, the services provided and the investor's fee structure preferences. Compensation earned by the firm and the broker from fee-based accounts was generally not dependent on whether a customer bought or sold securities.

"Firms that offered fee-based brokerage services had an obligation to do so using supervisory systems that were specifically designed for such business activities," said Susan L. Merrill, FINRA Executive Vice President and Chief of Enforcement. "SunTrust's former program was yet another example of a firm that failed to put in place supervisory systems designed to ensure that its fee-based account was appropriate for the customers it placed in the program. In addition, SunTrust also failed to monitor these accounts to ensure that they remained appropriate for the customers who opened them."

FINRA found that during the period from November 2002 through December 2005, SunTrust opened over 2,644 Portfolio Choice accounts without adequately assessing whether the accounts were appropriate for its customers. SunTrust further failed to adequately monitor the activity in the Portfolio Choice accounts to ensure that they remained appropriate for its customers. FINRA identified at least 36 Portfolio Choice accounts that conducted no trades for at least eight consecutive quarters—and those 36 accounts were charged over $129,000 in fees during the last four inactive quarters.

In addition, certain Portfolio Choice accountholders paid both a commission on transactions and an asset-based fee on those same assets. In more than 900 instances, SunTrust erroneously failed to exclude a customer asset purchased with a commission from the asset base used to calculate the account fee. In these cases, the customers were double- charged, as they paid both a commission on the transaction as well as an ongoing fee on the asset. The double charges resulted in approximately $437,500 in excess fees and/or commissions paid by SunTrust customers.

FINRA also found that SunTrust inappropriately allowed numerous customers to maintain accounts in the program and to pay for those accounts even though they had not traded in years. For example, in December 2003 one customer transferred to SunTrust an account in which there had been no trading activity for almost two years and set up a Portfolio Choice fee-based account. There was no trading activity in this account through March 2006, yet during that period the firm charged the account approximately $8,170 in asset-based fees. In another example, a customer transferred an IRA account to SunTrust in November 2003. This account was set up as a Portfolio Choice fee-based account. From November 2003 through January 2006, the account had no trading activity, but the customer was charged $8,672 in fees from its inception until March 2006.

During the period from Jan. 1, 2002, through Sept. 2, 2005, SunTrust also failed to establish a supervisory system, including written procedures, reasonably designed to ensure that its registered representatives charged its customers fair and reasonable commissions on securities transactions. SunTrust employed an automated commission system that allowed commissions over five percent to be charged when low-priced and/or low quantities of stocks were bought or sold. As a result, certain customers were charged excess commissions totaling nearly $100,000.

In settling this matter, the firm neither admitted nor denied the charges, but consented to the entry of FINRA's findings. Under the terms of the settlement, SunTrust agreed to certify to FINRA that it has refunded $713,362 in fees and interest to affected accountholders.

FINRA Fines Banorte Securities International $1.1 Million for Improper Sales of Class B Mutual Fund Shares

Firm to Offer Remediation to More than 300 Customers in Over 1,400 Transactions

FINRA has imposed a $1.1 million fine on Banorte Securities International, Ltd. for unsuitable sales of Class B shares in off-shore mutual funds as well as failing to have adequate supervisory systems to monitor those sales.

As part of this settlement, the firm agreed to a remediation plan that will address over 1,400 transactions in the accounts of more than 300 customer households. Banorte Securities International, which is headquartered in New York, is part of an affiliated group of companies that includes a Mexican broker-dealer and a Mexican bank. The majority of the firm's customers live in Mexico.

"Firms have a suitability obligation to consider all relevant factors when recommending mutual fund investments to customers, whether those customers live inside or outside of the United States. That means that firms must consider all available share classes and pricing features in determining what is most advantageous to the customer,” said Susan L. Merrill, Executive Vice President and Chief of Enforcement. “Banorte Securities International failed to ensure that their sales force and customers understood the impact that share class pricing had on investment performance. As a result, customers often missed the opportunity to take advantage of the lower costs available with Class A shares.”

In recommending the purchase of mutual funds, off-shore or domestic, a firm must determine the suitability of the class of shares to be purchased as well as the suitability of the particular fund. Primary considerations for share class suitability include the investment amount, the expected term of the investment, the applicable sales loads, fees and expenses associated with each class of shares. These factors affect the total return on the investment to the customer.

Mutual funds have different classes of shares representing interests in the same portfolio of securities, but differing in the structure and amount of sales charges paid directly by shareholders as well as the continuous, assets-based fees assessed on each shareholder’s investment. Class A shares generally charge a front-end sales charge and impose on-going asset-based fees that are generally lower than the asset-based fees imposed by Class B shares. Class B shares typically do not charge a front-end sales charge, but they do impose asset-based fees that are generally higher than those associated with Class A shares. Class B shares also impose a declining contingent deferred sales charge for a period of time.

FINRA found that Banorte Securities International recommended Class B shares of off-shore mutual funds to its customers in certain transactions where the customers would have financially benefited from purchasing Class A shares - particularly since the firm had negotiated lower front-end sales charges for off-shore mutual fund Class A shares with several mutual fund companies. FINRA further found that the firm’s written policies and procedures did not require its registered representatives to weigh the economic consequences of purchasing different share classes or to explain those consequences to customers. Moreover, Banorte Securities failed to provide guidelines that instructed registered representatives that Class A share off-shore mutual fund purchases eligible for these low front-end loads were generally cheaper for customers than Class B shares.

During 2003 through May 2004, most mutual fund sales at Banorte Securities were in Class B shares, despite the fact that the low front-end loads available to the firm’s customers meant that an investment in Class A shares generally yielded a higher return than a similar investment in the Class B shares.

The firm settled this matter without admitting or denying the allegations, but consented to the entry of FINRA’s findings.

J.P. Turner Fined $250,000 for Failing to Supervise Commissions Charged on Stock Trades

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) has imposed a $250,000 fine against J.P. Turner & Company, LLC of Atlanta, GA, for failing to have an adequate supervisory system designed to ensure that its registered representatives charged customers fair and reasonable commissions on stock trades.

As part of the settlement, FINRA ordered J.P. Turner to retain, at its own expense, an independent consultant to conduct a comprehensive review of the adequacy of the firm's policies, systems, procedures, and training relating to FINRA's Fair Pricing Rule.

"In order to establish a fair commission or mark-up, brokers must take into consideration all of the relevant circumstances and not just whether the commission is below a certain percentage of the total price of the transaction," said Susan Merrill, FINRA Executive Vice President and Chief of Enforcement. "In this case, J.P. Turner allowed its brokers to charge commissions of up to 4.5% on almost every stock trade without regard to the circumstances, such as the size of the transaction, the cost of executing the order, or whether the securities were readily available in the market."

FINRA requires firms to implement a system and reasonable procedures to ensure that customers are fairly charged for transactions, taking into consideration all relevant factors. FINRA's mark-up policy lists seven factors for firms to consider: the type of security involved; the availability of the security in the market; the price of the security; the size of the transaction; disclosure to the customer; the pattern of the firm's mark-ups; and, the nature of the firm's business.

FINRA found that between January 2002 and March 2005, J.P. Turner's supervisory system and written procedures failed to take these factors into account and failed to provide adequate guidance to its registered representatives to determine a fair commission or mark-up on equity securities transactions.

FINRA found that under J.P. Turner's system and procedures, representatives had discretion to establish the commission on such transactions, limited only by whether the price of the security was above or below $25 per share. On all equity securities transactions in which the price of the security was below $25, registered representatives were allowed to charge up to 4.5%, while they could only charge up to 3.5% if the price of the security was above $25. During the review period, 91% of the firm's equity securities transactions involved securities priced below $25 per share.

J.P. Turner's trading manager was responsible for reviewing and approving trades for fair and reasonable charges. Those reviews, however, were limited to reviewing the transactions to ensure that the commissions charged did not exceed the firm's 3.5% and 4.5% guidelines.

In concluding this settlement, J.P. Turner neither admitted nor denied the charges, but consented to the entry of FINRA's findings.
